Using TBC, TBD, and TBA in their work when writing business documentation, authors often use TBC or TBD or TBA on diagrams and reports to obtain detailed information in which they are not yet sure. First they will present a series of solved and some items with full details, and then a paragraph (s) in which they are not yet sure: TBC! This example of a roadmap portfolio uses TBC here. So they just mean the same thing? This redirects the terms of the placeholder when planning TBA, TBC and TBD events. For other purposes, see TBA (disambiguation), TBC (disambiguation) and TBD (disambiguation). Announcements (TBA) that must be confirmed or continued (TBC) to be identified or identified or announced (TBD), and other options are placeholder terms used very widely in the planning case to indicate that although something is planned or expected to happen, a specific aspect that has yet to be corrected or established. TBA vs. TBC vs. TBD These phrases are similar, but can be used for varying degrees of uncertainty: Being declared (TBA) or to be announced (TBD) - details can be determined but not yet ready to be announced. To be confirmed (TBC) to be resolved (TBR), or to be provided (TBP) - details may have been identified and possibly announced, but still subject to change before completion. It has not yet been decided whether the event is appropriate, feasible and the venue of the event. Other similar phrases, sometimes used to convey the same meaning and using the same acronyms, include being established, being organized, being made, must be made, a decision will be made, and be announced. The use of the acronym TBA is officially reported in the background work, at least as early as 1955, and TBD is also reported back in 1967. Examples of these different filler terms are often used to refer to the public that a vacant position in the lineup of speakers, musicians or other performers has yet to be filled. Terms also often indicate that a creative work, such as an album or film, is forthcoming, but that the release date is not yet known. If the upcoming project has not yet been named, these sites can be used to indicate that the name has not yet been chosen, although the project may also be designated as untitled before making such a decision. Conditions are also used in sports schedules, especially when one team is locked in a position in the playoff schedule, but its opponent is not yet eligible because several teams can claim a spot depending on their remaining wins or losses in the season, or because other teams have not yet completed in playoff games that will determine who will face the locked team. In government and business, these terms can be used to indicate that a vacant organizational position is expected to be filled, or conversely, that a particular person employed in a job not yet established. The investment type of TBA (meaning to be announced) is also used to describe a specific type of simple mortgage investment, forward mortgage-backed This is used to indicate that the investor is acquiring some of the pending pool of as yet uncertain mortgages that will be listed on a specified delivery date. This use has existed since at least the 1980s. A.N. Extracted from I am looking for an acronym for an event that is expected to happen in the future but has yet to happen. Like TBD in order to be identified and TBA in order to be announced. My events are a series of checkpoints and reviews that will occur in the lifecycle of product design in my company. I am looking for an acronym to put in the field date before the actual checkpoint takes place. UPDATE To clarify, a term that I'm looking for for something that will finally happen. There is a chart that says things like : Initial review - (date), secondary review - (date) etc. It is not an event that people need to know in advance, but more of this happened that day kind of thing. I just want something to put in the date box instead of leaving it blank to indicate that it is not yet complete.
