Brooke Slezak Produced by Casey Hale and Stephen Schwartz For Antiques Dealers Casey Hale and Stephen Schwartz, a collection bug first struck while on vacation in New Orleans in 1997. I kept looking at this McCoy vase, and on the last day I said if it was $75 or less, I was going to buy it. Casey recalls. Well, it was $75, I bought it, and within two or three months we purchased 300 pieces of McCoy. Ever since that fateful purchase, the men have returned to New Orleans every year to shop for Urban Country, an antique shop they now own in Venice, California After Katrina hit New Orleans, our hearts broke for the city as well as for all the people we learned when we visited, Casey says. We realized that the best way to help the city rebuild would be to patronize the antique shops and restaurants that have inspired us over the years, adds Stephen. New Orleans may be down, but it can't be beaten. Sweet Dreams Soniat House: Located on Chartres Street in a quieter, less touristy part of the French quarter, this charming 33-room hotel occupies three elegant 1830 townhouses. Expect a period of antiques, spacious galleries (left) and two lush courtyards serving breakfast. Monteleone Hotel: This Royal Street attraction has been welcoming visitors to the block since 1886. In addition to comfortable rooms, the hotel has a beautiful rooftop pool overlooking the Mississippi River. Despite everything that happened to the city after Hurricane Katrina, New Orleans still has a beautiful, mysterious quality that is hard to describe, Casey says. The Garden District of Magazine Street in the garden area is my favorite place to shop in New Orleans, hands down, says Stephen. The first stop for Casey and Stephen is always Bush Antiques, an expansive two-year-old shop crowded with 19th-century French furniture, garden salvage, and religious facilities handpicked by owner Allen Bush. Others are sure to see antique shops: Simon of New Orleans, which has chandeliers, Italian serving trays, and exuberant signs painted by artist Simon Hardeveld; and La Belle Nouvelle Orleans, whose garden is sculpture, ornate iron gates and fences, and a large warehouse filled with European parts of the event is a big draw. Additional favorites include Dodge Fjeld and UP - a quirky store located on Winky's mezzanine-level clothing boutique - which carries home accessories such as vintage handbags repurposed into a one-of-a-kind wall clock. In the Tee-Eva takeaway window, order red beans and rice, sweet pecan praline, or icy, fruity-flavored snobol. Hit Frankie and Johnny for generous portions of spicy boiled crayfish and pass-through beer. For rich chicory coffee and fresh beignets, Cafe du Monde Required. For one of the best burgers in New Orleans, visit the port of call. The pull of the old-school New Orleans dining room? Dining room? table at Galatoire's, Arnaud's, or Uppertime, where food and service are reliable at the highest level. When you're planning a trip to New Orleans, you really have to stay at least a week just to eat at all the fabulous restaurants in town, says Stephen. When it comes to the historic French quarter, Casey and Stephen prefer unusual vintage shops - Le Garage, Collectible Antiques, and Vieux Carre Vinyl - to the southern part of Decatur Street. There are many shops on Royal Street as well, but they tend to be more expensive and carry a lot of high-end European antiques that we don't collect. This is Steven. You can't go to Decatur Street expecting to find a fine Americana, warns Casey, but you'll find something fun. After shopping, Casey and Steven save time exploring the cobbled alleys of the French quarter. They check out works of art displayed by local artists around Jackson Square; Browse a carefully edited selection of Southern fiction, including many of the first editions, in Faulkner House Books; and people are watching at Cafe du Monde, a 24-hour outpost of the city for cafes au lait and sugar dust beignets. The city is the perfect place for such an event, and not just because of its outstanding history of cocktails and bars that are some of the best anywhere. No, the real reason New Orleans is the best place on earth to drink is because of the city's lack of an open container law. Drinking on the street is perfectly legal in NOLA- as long as you make it out of a plastic cup. The law means that even in some of the city's most elegant and legendary watering holes, such as the Sazerac Bar at the Roosevelt Hotel, you will find an antique table next to the outlet stacked high with plastic cups so you can take your craft cocktail to go. Few other places in America's Las Vegas Strip come to mind allowing you to consume alcohol on the street, but New Orleans offers far and far the best bar scene places that allow it. A writer for New Orleans magazine reviewed the effects of the crackdown on go-cups earlier this year (to ease trash complaints from bar neighbors), saying that New Orleans is without go-cups like New Orleans without street musicians, tap dancers, trams, painted coconuts and a second line. City Councilwoman Latoya Cantrell told Chris Rose magazine that go-cups are here to stay if she has her way: I don't see the City Council outlawing go-cups, she said. Citizens go crazy - I'm one of them. I remember I was working on a regulation banning smoking in bars and casinos, and one person said to me: You can take our cigarettes but you you No F--- with go-cups! They can live long. Tourism is definitely returning to New Orleans Jazz, beignets, Creole cuisine, and all, especially in the French quarter. I was so inspired during an April visit that I planned a second trip in June to not only re-experience the tourist areas, but also to work at Habitat for Humanity's home in still Katrina devastated Central City. While the Big Easy is enjoyable at any time of year, the best time of year is to visit New Orleans from November to December. The temperature is warm enough for most visitors, the city is dressed in festive decorations, and there are no crowds, which means cheaper prices for travel and accommodation. Learn more about the weather, New Orleans seasons, key events and festivals, and more information to help you plan the perfect trip. In New Orleans, expect a long, hot and sweltering summer, with winters that are short but sometimes surprisingly cool. Temperatures in New Orleans typically range from 45 degrees Fahrenheit to more than 90 degrees, but are rarely lower. Mid-July is usually the hottest, although the summer heat can last in September. Rain is also more common in the summer months, depressing temperature and humidity. If you hope to avoid scorching summer temperatures, temperatures, and November, February and March are usually the best bets. The early spring months are especially pleasant when you avoid the icy winter conditions in the north and autumn months are perfect for cozy, homely neighborhood street fairs and a touch of festive festivities. Autumn is also the driest time to visit. While Mardi Gras is one of the busiest times to visit, the weather is usually good, making it a great time to plan a trip, including other activities too, such as a day trip to the Tabasco factory or even a swamp tour. Go ahead and visit Mardi Gras, remembering that the Mardi Gras season, called Carnival, takes place in the weeks leading up to the big event, which is usually in mid-February or early March. Parades, parties, balls and general entertainment run from January 6 to Mardi Gras. You will need a slightly higher budget to visit at this time of year, but if you like the festive, noisy nature of the festival, this is the perfect time. If you visit the French quarter of the festival (early April) or JazzFest (from late April to early May), expect large crowds but lots of music, food and fun. If you are on a budget, consider visiting during the summer. July and August are hot, yes, but hotel deals galore and August brings COOLinary New Orleans, a month of special restaurant deals designed to lure tourists on a budget. Use! You'll find that the heat makes outdoor activities challenging, but there's a lot to do indoors, and if you take it slowly and drink plenty of fluids, you can only survive fine outside, too. Louisiana and New Orleans in particular love the holidays. With 130-plus festivals held in the state each year, there is no doubt something to do all year round. The most famous festival is Mardi Gras, which covers two or three weeks in February or March. Festive krewes splash out on the streets of New Orleans and nearby towns, complete with floats, marching bands and dance groups. Fat Tuesday, the day before Ash Wednesday, is the most popular day for celebrations. Other popular events throughout the year include the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival, the French quarter festival, the Voodoo Music and Art Experience, and the New Orleans Oyster Festival. Spring is the peak tourist season in New Orleans, which is not surprising given the mild weather and the full calendar of events. You want to book hotels early - up to a year in advance if you plan to visit during Mardi Gras, and expect crowds in restaurants and other popular establishments. Events to check out the Mardi Gras season last until March, although the exact dates vary each year. Locals and tourists flock to the streets of the city to see the parades and catch the famous beads. The New Orleans Jazz and Legacy Festival runs from the last weekend in April and the first in May. Locals will perform as well as world-renowned artists. Summer can be brutally hot, but if you hope to avoid the crowds and perhaps perhaps a few bucks, a summer visit is not a bad idea. July and August are the hottest months, with an average temperature of 91 degrees, but June and September are also quite warm. As a revulsion, however, the crowds are smaller and you'll pay less for accommodation than you'll in other months. Events to check out on the Fourth of July, New Orleans hosts Go 4 on the River, celebrating with fireworks shot from a duel barge on the Mississippi River. The annual Essence Music Festival, held in July, showcases performances by some of the most popular R&B and hip-hop artists. While the city can still be hot in September, October and November in New Orleans are straight shoulder seasons that have excellent weather, small crowds, and reasonable hair prices in hotels. Although you won't find as many exciting events as winter or spring, it's a great time to visit. Events to check out the New Orleans Film Festival, one of the nation's best film festivals, takes place in October. The Voodoo Music and Art Experience is held at the end of October. The event includes hundreds of performers, including some of the biggest names in musical entertainment. Winter is a sweet place to visit New Orleans. Temperatures are still pleasantly mild (average highs are usually around 60 degrees) and bargain hotel prices can be found. Also, if you visit around the holidays, you get to catch the city dressed in Christmas decor. Events to check out the Celebration at the Oaks is an annual holiday attraction in New Orleans. From Thanksgiving until New Year ' the city hosts one of the best festive light shows in the country. On Christmas Eve, don't miss the bonfires on Levi's. This Cajun tradition consists of fires erected on river dams designed to illuminate the path for Papa Noel, Cajun version of Santa Claus. Thank you for letting us know!
